

The impolite passenger

One afternoon, I was in a shuttle bus reading a magazine and listening to the MP3 player. Suddenly, the passenger beside me leaned on my shoulder to try to read my magazine. I politely told him that I could not accept such kind of behaviour and I suggested him buying a magazine himself.

The passenger apologized, 'I was not reading your magazine, I was just listening to the song in your MP3 player, this English song is my favourite.'

Fruit

A beautifully-dressed woman concentrated in selecting fruits at a roadside fruit stall while her St. Bernard was licking the grapes by the time. Though the vendor was very upset, he still politely asked the woman to stop her dog. The woman then instructed her dog, 'Richard, stop licking the grapes, they are dirty.'

The juror

Upon Stuart received the summon inviting him to be a juror, he appealed for the exemption. Stuart explained, 'Your Highness. I am the business manager in my company and have lots to handle every day. I think I cannot leave my company.'

The judge said, 'Oh, do you mean that your company cannot operate without you?'

Stuart said, 'No, your highness. My company can still operate even I leave. And this is my only concern. My boss will cut my position if he knows the fact.'
