Right and Wrong

One day, a moral education teacher was trying to illustrate the difference between right and wrong to her students. She gave them the following example for discussion. She said, 'If I were to get into John's pocket and take all the money from his wallet. What would I be?'

Tom, a classmate of John immediately raised his hand, and with a cunning smile said, 'You'd be his mother.'

Coincidence

Kelly and Clara were having high tea in a restaurant and talking about coincidence. Kelly said, "My mother used to love reading 'The Tales of Two Cities' and she gave birth to twins, my sister Jane and me."

'That's funny,' Clara remarked.

Then Kelly continued, "My friend Eva loves reading 'The three little pigs' and then she gave birth to triplets."

Clara's face was getting pale and looked very scared while listening, so Kelly asked her the reason. Then Clara said, "I am a super reader of 'The Snow White and the seven dwarfs.'"

Talking on the phone

Doris is a teenage student from a single-parent family, living with her mother in a small apartment in the north district of Macau. She is such a lonely girl that she always talks on the phone after school.

One evening, she received a phone call and talked on it for half an hour, and then hung up.

'That was short. What's wrong with you? You always talk for two hours.' Her mother asked curiously.

'It's the wrong number,' replied Doris.
