

What kids can do to change the world

Chan Yu Sze Christina

Many smart, marvelous high-intelligence-quotient kids have appeared in these fantastic years - the 21st Century. Most of the parents feel assured that these kids are the future leaders of the world, and they have “Super EASY Living Plans” for them. So what is included in these plans? It is just something common which almost 100% of the parents would do --- sending the kids to “prestigious” schools, enrolling them in different extra-curricular activities, and even choosing a suitable future career for them.

Nowadays kids are overprotected by their parents. Most of them do not learn other kinds of things aside from those related to their “bright” future. They are supposed to start to learn about the world out there. They should start to protect the Earth that they are living on. But HOW?

First, kids should be taught the ways to save the Earth rather than causing damage to it. For example, how can we save the animals that are nearly extinct? How can we live a green life? How can we create less rubbish? These are the facts that kids should start to consider. They can also learn more about science and technology and use their knowledge to improve their living standards in the future. They can use the future technology to solve the problems that have arisen nowadays, like the problem of starving and the problem of global warming.

As scientists sense that we may encounter the problem of starvation, they start to keep the seeds of different plants. They try to grow those seeds in a glass house to prepare for starvation in the future. Besides this, are there any still better solutions? Adults can teach their kids to treasure food and not to waste it. We can also teach the kids to do more charity work and donate money to the countries that are suffering from starvation.

Global warming is a serious problem. The leaders in different countries are trying to find ways to save the Earth as there is a big hole in the ozone layer. Scientists should invent more special items that can improve our lives, but the Earth is far more important than the inventions as we are all living on this planet. Adults should start to educate the kids and make them realize that the Earth is now in danger. They can start to save the Earth through their daily practices. For example, they should turn off the electronic appliances before they go to bed so as to save electricity. They can make better use of public transportation and use private vehicles less often. There are thousands of ways to save the Earth. We should start and act now. Adults should act as role models of the kids so that they will learn and improve their lives in the future.

Children are still young but it seems that the world’s future is in their hands. We hope that they can handle the future world well and can make it a better place to live in!
